

New Management positions at Instant UpRight

Instant UpRight, the worlds leading manufacturer of Aluminium Tower Systems, has strengthened its Senior Management team with three new appointments in line with the company's strategic plan to double the turnover by 2012.

Eamonn Griffith has been appointed as Business Development Director responsible for growing the company's non-standard products and services portfolio - Boiler and Power Generation Access Systems, Aviation Access and bespoke Engineering Access Solutions which includes the company's Spandek walkway and bridging system.

The global role will also include establishing and managing the company's distribution networks in the USA, Asia and the Middle East.

Griffith's main area of expertise has been in establishing and managing distribution networks within manufacturing, construction and electronics industries.

Mark Edwards was recently appointed to the position of Commercial Director responsible for Finance, IT and Human Resources. Based at the Dublin HQ, he will play a major part in the company's growth plans including working with customers to grow their respective businesses using more flexible finance packages. Key areas of focus also include the implementation of new financial measures and improved business practices.

Edwards has a solid background in Chartered Accountancy working in the construction and print sectors.

Scot Ballantine takes on the new role of Supply Chain Manager based in Dublin. The position includes responsibility for Customer Services and the complete Supply Chain function, directing the business towards providing higher quality products and service levels. His initial focus will concentrate on supplier development and quality systems. The role will also play a key part in expediting new product to market.

Ballantine is a qualified engineer with extensive experience in lean manufacturing techniques and quality systems. He is originally from Chicago and has lived and worked in Ireland for ten years.
